Turbo prepaid card balance inquiry

A recent study by Javelin Strategy & Research has shown that consumers are starting to favor a different type of plastic. A financial industry research team found that the use of prepaid debit card reboots was increasing as credit card usage began to decrease. Prepaid cards are essentially traditional debit cards without a bank account. We get a lot of interest in these types of cards. Credit.com a spokeswoman for MainStreet's Gerry Detweiler said. She agrees that cards are very popular with non-banks or under-banks of individuals who do not qualify for a traditional line of credit. They have also become a frequent choice of college students, thanks, in part, to the Credit Card Accountability Act, Liability and Disclosure, which prohibits companies from issuing credit to anyone under 21 unless the applicant has a stable source of income or willing co-signing. In addition, Detweiler notes that low-income individuals who can't fund a credit line for a secured credit card often choose a prepaid debit card, allowing users to put a specified amount of money on a plastic card that can be accessed immediately. With a prepaid card, you can go out and spend the money tomorrow, explains Detweiler. This is different from a secured credit card that requires customers to put the amount of money upfront that will match their line of credit. Of course, this money is not intended to pay off the existing card balance; it is intended to serve as collateral and subsequently minimize the risks of default. So those living up to paychecks generally have to credit a secured credit card as they don't have to cost to insure a line of credit. However, both Detweiler and other industry experts argue that those in the market for new payment methods should not be shaken simply by the availability of a prepaid card. For starters, this will have no effect on your credit score as it is essentially a gift card that can be used for general purposes. Your activities are not reported to credit bureaus, so it doesn't help your credit, Tim Chen, CEO of NerdWallet.com explains. In addition, unlike traditional debit cards, prepaid cards do not attract interest and cannot be tied to a savings account. Another major difference between the two payment options is that prepaid cards tend to have a list of fees associated with them that can outweigh their convenience. According to Detweiler, in addition to monthly maintenance costs, prepaid card fees may be incurred when cardholders:• Download money to the card• Request a paper statement• You need to speak to a customer service representative directly• Go for a long period of time without using the card• Cancel the card, in case you the light of these fees, Chen notes that anyone considering [a prepaid card], it is probably better to simply open a checking account and get a standard debit card. In fact, he said, secured cards are the best option for those who renew your loan as well, although of course those tend to have a lot of fees associated with them. Upside down the protected card is that it will generally carry a better fraud protection policy than prepaid cards. (For a detailed explanation of the different rules that apply to both, read our anti-debit card fraud article.) Of course, prepaid cards do not dine without appealing them. Those who are non-bankers may want to use them to buy goods online, rent a car or make other big purchases. If you choose a prepaid card, you should treat it like any debit or credit card and comparison store. Bruce McClari, spokesman for ClearPoint Credit Counseling Solutions, says two main criteria should be applied: Cards must be ate with the logo of the main card issuer (such as Visa or Mastercard) so you know they can be used anywhere, and the card you choose must have the smallest amount of fees added to it. If you are inclined or forced to choose a prepaid payment method, MainStreet has a round of cards that are your best bets:Mango Prepaid MasterCard This card is recommended Credit.com since it carries no activation fee if you download $500 on it first. There is also a $20 admission bonus, and the monthly fee doesn't apply if you reboot at least $5 to your card every month. However, those unable to reload their cards will carry a $5 charge. There is also a fee of $4.95 to reload the card from an external retailer such as CVS or Rite Aid, and a 50 percent fee for requesting an ATM balance. Most of the costs, however, can be avoided if you service the card online. Wired Plastic Prepaid Visa This card has a variety of fees associated with it, including a $9.95 activation fee, a monthly fee for $3.95, a 95 per cent fee for PIN purchases, a $2.95 paper statement fee and a 95 cent ATM balance request fee. However, Chen recommends the card because it offers rewards. For example, users earn one point per $1 if they sign (rather than use a PIN) for purchases. Points cost half a cent when used to purchase prepaid wireless minutes with AT&T, Verizon, T-Mobile and TracFone. In addition, direct deposits, PayPal transfers and transfers are free of charge. And like a Mango card, many fees can be avoided by serving the card online. Account Now Visa Gold This card offers a low activation fee of $9.95. A residual monthly fee of $9.95 can be circumvented if you download $3,000 or more on the card during this month. Similar to a Mango card, there is no fee to reload the card unless you use a third-party exit to do so. Other fees include $1 to check balance through ATM, $2 to with a customer service representative by phone, and a 50-cent fee to check the card balance over the phone. Online services, however, are free. Vision Silver PrePaid MasterCard With this card you can avoid a $9.95 activation fee if you use the card email form that is available when registering online. The card carries a low of $3.95 monthly and free signature purchases, but you will incur a 95-cent fee for pin purchases. You can reload the card for free directly through the provider. Online services are free. But other fees to be aware of include a $14.95 cancellation fee, a 95 cent ATM balance request fee and a BankingMyWay.com $2.95 paper statement fee. To use the National Bank of Abu Dhabi's prepaid card request system, enter the last two digits of the card number. Also enter the identification number of the card located on the card face in the lower left section, reported on the bank's website. Click Go to start the query. Abu Dhabi National Bank offers five different options for a prepaid eDirham card, the bank's website explains. EDirham prepaid cards offer cardholders reduced transaction fees in ministries and the Government of the United Arab Emirates. Customers are not required to have a bank account using these cards. Each card has a different cost and shelf life. Abu Dhabi National Bank also offers Ratibi a prepaid salary card, the bank's website notes. This card has no monthly fee and does not require a minimum balance. It also gives the cardholder constant access to the largest ATM network or CDM for free. Abu Dhabi National Bank offers credit cards, according to the bank's website. Cardholders earn stars for each purchase on their cards, which they can redeem for travel, meals and reward purchases. Credit cards can also offer additional services such as concierge services, discounts and no annual fee. Photo by Jeff J Mitchell/Getty Images Prepaid debit cards, otherwise known as restarting general purpose cards, could be an alternative to traditional credit and debit cards. They often even look like other cards and carry a lot of logos that we learn - MasterCard, Discover and Visa. But that's where the similarities end. What is a prepaid debit card? It can be used to make purchases in stores and online, get direct deposits, pay bills online, and get cash from an ATM, all like what a debit card does, writes Consumer Reports. Unlike debit cards, however, you don't need to have a bank account. Cards can be purchased in stores or online. Pros This is a great way to control your spending. Perhaps the most popular use of prepaid cards is the transfer of funds from parents to children and especially college students, Bankrate writes. If you don't have a high income, often away from home, or are looking for a way to track your children's spending, this can be a solid option. You don't have to go through the bump and expenses of a bank account, either – all you need is mobile and a prepaid card. It's a great way to give kids a little more financial freedom by allowing you to control it. It can also be a substitute for a standard bank account. If you live in a community that may not have a ton of bank options or previous problems with the bank that can make it difficult to open an account, it is certainly worth considering. According to Bankrate, prepaid debit cards do not require credit checks. Cons A's prepaid debit card doesn't have the same protection that other cards can offer. If your card is lost, stolen or used for unauthorized transactions, this may be a total loss to you. Cards can also be downloaded by fees, some of which are disclosed at the point of sale. Other fees can be found on the issuer's website, consumer reports says. What to consider If you are looking for a prepaid debit card, there are several commissions you should take into account. Be sure to review the following: activation fees, monthly payments, sales transaction fees, cash withdrawal fees, balance request fees, paper statement fees, customer service charges, bill charges, append fees (also known as cash downloads), dormancy card fees, fees to get your residual funds back upon closing the account, and overdraft fees. You can take some steps to avoid fees, but first you need to make sure you understand the different ways you can be charged. Your costs will vary widely depending on which card you choose and how you use it, so make sure you understand these costs before you choose a card. With some cards, you may be able to reduce the fee by using a direct deposit to download money to the card. You can avoid non-network ATMs by getting cash back when making purchases and checking your balance online or over the phone, according to Consumer Reports. My Bank Tracker recommends choosing a checking account if you get direct deposits - checking accounts tends to offer more services for less money. But, if you're going to go with a prepaid card, stick with a big financial institution. They often offer better services including lower fees, more access to ATMs and a direct deposit. Recommendations According to My Bank Tracker, here are a few prepaid cards worth looking at. Chase Liquid: The first prepaid product of its kind, Chase Liquid is offered nationwide by the bank and comes with check-account capabilities (it doesn't come with checks, however). You can use a direct deposit, or you can deposit money using the nationwide Chase ATM network, which comes on free. The Chase Liquid card offers consumers ways to download cash for free and withdraw cash for free, making it unlike many other prepaid cards. American Express Prepaid: American Express offers a fairly cheap prepaid card. It doesn't require a minimum balance, and there are no hidden fees. It's free to register online, offers free Reboots in more than 19,500 locations, provides free ATM withdrawals at more than 24,000 locations nationwide, and offers free bill payment online. Mango: Mango isn't as basic as the other two, but it offers some cool features. You can apply online for a card, no overdraft fees, hidden fees, payments, interest charges. Mango also has a savings account that pays 6 percent APY. Against? It charges $2 for ATM withdrawals, which can add up pretty quickly if you withdraw frequently.
